

HELPS TO GET GOOD HELP.
Last Week THE WORLD Published
559 MORE
Help Wanted Advertisements than all the 15 other New York morning, evening and Sunday newspapers combined.

PRICE ONE CENT.

Do You Want to Buy, Sell or Exchange Real Estate?

A 3-LINE ADVT. 3 TIMES in the WORLD Costs But $2.01.

EXTRA. 2 O'CLOCK. CRANK AT DEPEW'S.

Posted a Notice on the Door Saying He's a Marked Man.

Written in Latin and Speaks of the Example Set by Vaillant.

Denial that the Vanderbilts' Houses Were Also Visited.

While Chauncey M. Depew was in Peekskill last Tuesday night, delivering a lecture on "Familiar Scenes at the Vatican," some crank anarchist or other evil-minded person, sneaked up the front steps of Mr. Depew's residence at 48 West Fifty-fourth street, and posted on that front door jamb, a placard, with the following Latin inscription:

"Frater-Temine ex tempore valant gloriis, flos divit, hic est homo adulterus, immit, bis more."

"IMPERIO COMMUNIS POPULI."

A free translation into English of this notice is as follows:

"BROTHERS—REMEMBER THE GLORIOUS EXAMPLE OF VAILLANT. DEATH TO THE RICH MAN. THIS IS A MARKED MAN."

WARN ALL BY THE WILL OF THE COMMON PEOPLE.

In the lower right-hand corner was an oval drawing of a man, dressed in a bomb, with a fuse attached, in the center of which was printed in ordinary ink the letters "A. C. S. S. S. S. S."

The placard was of plain stiff paper, about four inches long and two inches wide, and was printed with a pen, and was fairly well executed.

Mr. Depew reported that the residences of other millionaires in Fifth avenue had been decorated in a similar manner.

At the Vanderbilt, Sloan, Shepard and Astor residences knowledge was denied anything of the kind, and the meaning of the placard was not understood.

At the Vanderbilt place didn't know what an Anarchist was, and professed the profound ignorance of the meaning of the word "inscription." He finally obtained authority from some one "knap" to say that the Vanderbilts had not been bothered by notices of this kind.

Anton Ekstrom, butler at the Depew residence, said he found the notice posted on the front door at 7:30 o'clock Wednesday morning.

"I learned to read Latin when I was a youngster," said Anton this morning, "and I found it difficult to decipher the rank of Mr. Depew was not at home at the time."

Mr. Depew had been attending the children's funeral, and from there went to Peekskill to deliver a lecture. When he returned Wednesday night he found the notice posted on his door.

Going upstairs, Mr. Depew walked into Mrs. Hegeman's room and found the notice posted on the door.

"I am condemned to death," "What for?" asked Mrs. Hegeman. "For being a marked man," he replied.

"I am not a marked man," he replied. "I am not a marked man," he replied.

Anton stated that Mr. Hegeman and his two grandchildren, both young ladies, were the only members of the family in the house at the time.

He pointed out the front door, Mr. Depew was not in the city and his son was at Columbia College.

HERE'S ANOTHER CRANK.

His Hobby Is Ordering Supplies for Raymond Street Jail.

The Brooklyn police are looking for a crank who is causing Warden Noonan, of the Raymond Street Jail, considerable trouble by visiting merchants in New York and Brooklyn and ordering large consignments of supplies for the jail.

Yesterday a wagon backed up to the prison door with 400 iron cuspidors which had been ordered by the crank.

The crank who is causing Warden Noonan, of the Raymond Street Jail, considerable trouble by visiting merchants in New York and Brooklyn and ordering large consignments of supplies for the jail.

Yesterday a wagon backed up to the prison door with 400 iron cuspidors which had been ordered by the crank.

The crank who is causing Warden Noonan, of the Raymond Street Jail, considerable trouble by visiting merchants in New York and Brooklyn and ordering large consignments of supplies for the jail.

Yesterday a wagon backed up to the prison door with 400 iron cuspidors which had been ordered by the crank.

The crank who is causing Warden Noonan, of the Raymond Street Jail, considerable trouble by visiting merchants in New York and Brooklyn and ordering large consignments of supplies for the jail.

Yesterday a wagon backed up to the prison door with 400 iron cuspidors which had been ordered by the crank.

The crank who is causing Warden Noonan, of the Raymond Street Jail, considerable trouble by visiting merchants in New York and Brooklyn and ordering large consignments of supplies for the jail.

Yesterday a wagon backed up to the prison door with 400 iron cuspidors which had been ordered by the crank.

WILL INVESTIGATE ANYWAY.

Senate Committee Will Go Ahead on City Club Charges.

Four of the seven Senators comprising the committee appointed to investigate the charges against the City Club, which arrived from Albany last night, were at the Hotel Metropole this morning. They came down with the firm intention of proceeding with the investigation whether or not the City Club is willing to give all the time necessary to the investigation. It does not propose to wait until after the Legislature adjourns.

The ultimatum sent up to Albany by President Smith of the chamber of Commerce, which was issued in the name of the City Club, was not the desired effect. While the committee is willing to give all the time necessary to the investigation, it does not propose to wait until after the Legislature adjourns.

"Understand," said Chairman Lusk, "we do not say there is anything wrong in Mr. Smith's ultimatum. We have not changed our position in the least. We came down here expecting that the Chamber of Commerce, the City Club and Dr. Parkhurst, all of whom we understood had made charges, would be ready to name their witnesses and go on with the investigation. It appears that they have not done so. If they do not do so today we will name our own counsel and get along the best way we can."

"We have brought along from Albany an 'Evening World' reporter this morning," said Chairman Lusk, "and we expect to have a more complete investigation of the City Club than we have had before."

"As to the limit of time, there is no limit to an investigation of this kind. We may have a year if necessary. We cannot, however, consent to postpone the investigation until after the Legislature adjourns. In the first place, nearly all the members of the committee are engaged in the business which would be ruined by a continuous absence of several months. For the same reasons we cannot postpone the investigation."

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

At noon the committee was to go into secret session.

A CONFESSED LIAR.

Cahill's Startling Testimony in McKane's Behalf.

Ordered to Make a Strong Report in the Gravesend Affair.

So the New York Probationary Policeman Swore Falsehood.

When the trial of John Y. McKane was resumed in the Brooklyn Court of Oyer and Terminer, this morning, it was evident that the defense intended to take up the rest of the week for the presentation of its case.

Before the trial proceeded Gen. Tracy arose and addressed the Court. He said that he would like to know when the defense would be through calling witnesses. He stated that if the defense had its case all in this week the prosecution would begin calling its witnesses in rebuttal, Monday.

Justice Bartlett told Mr. Roderick that he thought the defense should give its adversaries an idea when the case would be finished.

Mr. Roderick replied that before court adjourned for the day he would be in a position to state when the defense would begin.

The cross-examination of Dennis F. Cahill, the probationary policeman, was resumed by lawyer John Wernberg today with questions tending to show that the witness, from the nature of his former business as a detective, had very little regard for the truth. Asked if he thought that, under all circumstances, it was right to tell the truth.

"Well, answered the witness, 'there are certain things which can't tell the truth in making a report.'"

"You would state what was not true?"

"If I didn't have to swear to it I should not tell the truth if I were ordered to do so."

Cahill rehearsed the story of the trip to Gravesend by Gaynor's copyist Nov. 11.

He was standing near McKane on the porch of Hoerlein's Hotel when the party was arrested. He had just turned to protest to McKane against the arrest of the latter, when he was taken into custody himself. He stated that at that time the arrest was an outrage, but he was taken for the purpose of having the man arrested and getting the matter over.

Mr. Wernberg produced Cahill's report, made three days after the arrest, in the form of an affidavit. The witness could not reconcile the statements made in that report with what he swore to in his affidavit.

Justice Troy, on the red-hot examination, surprised Cahill by asking him to answer questions which tended still further to impeach his veracity.

"Which statement is true, the one made in your affidavit, or what you have sworn to here?"

"Why did you make the false statements?"

Mr. Cahill was told by his superior at Travers's Detective Agency, by whom I was employed, to make a strong report. I would make a strong report and swear to it."

Justice Bartlett: You mean to say that you made a strong report and swore to it?"

"Yes, sir."

"Are you were at the time a candidate for a position on the New York Police force?"

"Did you think that false statement about the drinks was for the force?"

asked Justice Troy.

"I didn't think that it would disqualify me."

After testifying that he received $5 from Mr. Gaynor and $15 from the detective agency, Cahill was allowed to step down.

He was followed by Abram E. Stillwell, Cahill's superior at the time he was "selected keeper of the graveyard."

Mr. Stillwell said he was in Hoerlein's Hotel at the time of the arrest. He drank at the bar himself several times and saw Morris and Sutherland and talked very much about what he saw there that night.

He said that he saw Cahill and Cahill was allowed to step down.

He was followed by Abram E. Stillwell, Cahill's superior at the time he was "selected keeper of the graveyard."

Mr. Stillwell said he was in Hoerlein's Hotel at the time of the arrest. He drank at the bar himself several times and saw Morris and Sutherland and talked very much about what he saw there that night.

He said that he saw Cahill and Cahill was allowed to step down.

He was followed by Abram E. Stillwell, Cahill's superior at the time he was "selected keeper of the graveyard."

Mr. Stillwell said he was in Hoerlein's Hotel at the time of the arrest. He drank at the bar himself several times and saw Morris and Sutherland and talked very much about what he saw there that night.

He said that he saw Cahill and Cahill was allowed to step down.

He was followed by Abram E. Stillwell, Cahill's superior at the time he was "selected keeper of the graveyard."

Mr. Stillwell said he was in Hoerlein's Hotel at the time of the arrest. He drank at the bar himself several times and saw Morris and Sutherland and talked very much about what he saw there that night.

He said that he saw Cahill and Cahill was allowed to step down.

He was followed by Abram E. Stillwell, Cahill's superior at the time he was "selected keeper of the graveyard."

Mr. Stillwell said he was in Hoerlein's Hotel at the time of the arrest. He drank at the bar himself several times and saw Morris and Sutherland and talked very much about what he saw there that night.

He said that he saw Cahill and Cahill was allowed to step down.

CAUGHT 4 BURGLARS.

And Policeman Lynch Says He Will Get Six More.

Saw Them Enter Child's Saloon Early This Morning.

They were typical looking toughs, with handbag appearances, and described themselves, respectively, as Frank Rice, seventeen years old, of 22 Tenth avenue; Thomas Murphy, aged twenty-nine, of 47 West Forty-third street; Albert Courtney, twenty-four years old, of 415 West Twenty-eighth street; and James O'Connor, aged twenty-one, of 58 Eleventh avenue.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

When he found an opportunity, he slipped into a hallway, from which he could watch the movements of the gang, who had returned to where they had stood when Lynch ordered them to disperse. A few minutes later they appeared through the front door of Child's saloon.

Four hours mentioned, Lynch saw a gang of ten young loafers, whom he knew by sight, loitering on his post on Forty-seventh street near Tenth avenue. He suspected that they were bent on some mischief, and ordered them to disperse and go home. They refused, and Lynch was called to them, and walked leisurely toward Ninth avenue.

"AND THE CAT CAME BACK."

CONGRESS

WRECKED BY ROBBERS

CAME TO BUY GREEN GOODS.

BOTH ARE MISSING.

Passenger Train Derailed at a Bridge Near Houston, Tex.

Two Tennesseans Intercepted at the Pennsylvania Depot.

Detectives Unable to Find Beardsley and Munzinger.

Were They "Tipped" as to the Grand Jury's Intention.

Report That Beardsley Has Left the City Reaches Col. Fellows.

Lawyer John C. Munzinger and ex-Civil-Service Examiner Henry W. Beardsley, who were jointly indicted by the Grand jury yesterday on the complaint of Mrs. Lucy McCarthy, the keeper of a disorderly house at 191 West Forty-ninth street, have not yet been arrested.

Detectives Morris and Dalton, who are detailed to look out for suspicious characters about the railroad depots in Jersey City, noticed two men last evening who had just come in on a train over the Pennsylvania road, and were wandering about the depot in an aimless fashion, evidently expecting to meet some one. They were slouch hats and carried huge valises. They were unmistakably countrymen from the South, and the detectives scented the usual green goods game. They accosted the two strangers and gradually drew them into conversation.

With a Southern drawl, one of the strangers said that he and his companion had come from Tennessee to buy green goods. They gave their names as William Lewis, of Philadelphia, and County, Tenn., and W. H. Vaughn, of Smithville, De Kalb County, Tenn.

Lewis appeared to be the leader. He showed the detectives green goods, circulars and telegrams. According to these documents, it was arranged for Lewis and Vaughn to go to Taylor's Hotel, in Jersey City, and register there as Lawrence. They were to meet the green goods men there and the password was to be "Tennessee."

They told the detectives they had received a sample of the green goods from the cashier of their bank in Philadelphia, and had shown this sample to the cashier of the Asparta Bank of Tennessee. He had declared it to be good money. They then concluded they had found a "snip" and came up North to secure it.

It is thought that if the green goods stuff was good enough to deceive the cashier of their bank it was good enough for them, and with this view in mind they had taken the train from New York, and were now in Jersey City, ready cash they could see a getter.

Two detectives accompanied Lewis and Vaughn to Taylor's Hotel, and had them register as directed by the green goods men. Lewis was induced to Mr. Lawrence's. It said:

It is said that the green goods men were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn.

They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn.

They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn.

They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn.

They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn.

They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn.

They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn.

They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn. They were very much disgusted at the arrest of Lewis and Vaughn.